A megadott linken szereplő fórumbejegyzés egy korábbi poszt újrakiadása (repost), amelyet egy Bitul9 nevű felhasználó tett közzé a Google AI Developers Forum felületén.
A bejegyzés több elemei és háttere:
GDPR és jogi vonatkozások: A repost kiemelten foglalkozik adatvédelmi kérdésekkel, és megemlít egy „Lepkevadász GDPR" elnevezésű csatolt képet.
Archivált linkek: A poszt több külső bizonyítékot és mentést is mellékelt az utókornak az Archive.ph és a Wayback Machine (Internet Archive) felületeiről.

Google, comply with the GDPR — even your own cache disagrees with you. If the original post is deleted (https://discuss.ai.google.dev/t/hi-im-lilian-and-the-first-step-is-admitting-it-so-i-worked-for-a-marketing-company-for-three-years/176830), then on what legal basis are you still storing it in your cache?

If the original post is deleted, then how are all the CDN-hosted images from the deleted forum thread still loading?

I demand an explanation. Here is the archived snapshot that also preserved the image URLs — you're caught red-handed:

Google is lying even about deleting forum posts — read this, the proof is right here in it.
Dear Kleanthi,
I am forwarding the most critical piece of evidence to date, which definitively proves Google's systemic violation of the GDPR Right to Erasure (Article 17).
Please review the attached screenshots carefully. They document an experiment involving a completely deleted Reddit account (u/HugeScore3158). When confronted, Google's own AI Overview system explicitly confessed to retrieving and exposing data from this deleted account by pulling it from Google's secret backend caches.
The AI literally quoted word-for-word posts from an account that no longer exists, proving that Google's data processing pipeline completely ignores user deletion requests. The data is kept, indexed, and actively served to users long after the source has been permanently deleted.
Google cannot deny this, as their own system output is the very proof of the violation. This perfectly aligns with my findings regarding Google AI Studio: their "Delete" functions are merely UI illusions, while the backend continuously hoards the data.
Please add these screenshots to my case file. This is the "smoking gun" that proves their entire deletion pipeline is a fraud.
Kind regards,
György Istókovics (Bitu79)
